

Dylan J. Principi: CPUC – Priorities Committee

Dylan is a second year graduate student in musicology and currently serves as the GSG representative for the department of music. He is running for office because he would like to see a humanities graduate student on the Priorities Committee of the CPUC. Dylan is active throughout the humanities division; this semester, he is a fellow in the Center for Digital Humanities, and he has participated in numerous study groups sponsored by the Humanities Council. Dylan currently teaches at Temple University, and he has a strong history of service in higher education. His offices have included Chair of the Psychoanalysis Interest Group of the Society for Music Theory (present), Treasurer of Temple University's graduate music association, and Regional Coordinator for the Pennsylvania Collegiate Music Educators Association. His original research has been featured in mid-Atlantic, national, and international conferences. Before beginning his master's degree at Temple University, Dylan was a public high school teacher.

As the University expands its interests into a new decade (and across Carnegie Lake), Dylan would like to make sure that graduate research and special projects in the arts and humanities continue to enrich the intellectual life of the Princeton community. As a member of the CPUC, Dylan will promote graduate life and support for interdisciplinary, collaborative, and artistic ventures as top priorities on campus.
